JUROR'S STATEMENT

The small print is the cognac of the printmaking hierarchy, and this show has been, through the long period of its existence, its celebrant. What a pleasure to judge a show from a seat at a wide table, handling the prints, passing them back and forth, holding them up to the light, touching the embossment, fingering the surface. No slideshow tomfoolery here; just the real article for close attention.

There are big prints and there are small prints, and they belong to different species. The small plate or block or stone can start as an afterthought, a scrap left hanging around, a little piece of stuff rescued from the box under the guillotine. Beware. Small scraps germinate small thoughts but small thoughts have the power to grow into obsessions. The challenge of the small format can become formidable. Not to respond is unthinkable.

The arena of the small print is intimacy. It occupies its private world held between the pages of a book, boxed within a folio, sealed beneath wax or resin, hung in sanctuary spots (bathroom, office), offering whispered conversations, discreet or indiscreet amusements, outrageous intellectual games, and more, veiled and personal. The artist is not the aggressor: the user has to make the moves.

We urge you to put on your glasses and enjoy the show selected.

DIRECTOR'S ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

For fifteen years there has been a multitude of generous people throughout the University who have helped and supported the Parkside National. Hundreds of artists from all around the country have exhibited over the years, and many more have had to try "next year". All the many efforts are appreciated, but no commitment has been more dear and sincere as the energy and dedication given by Steve Vasy since the show's first year. The show was a yearly labor of love for Steve; working with the prints, cataloging, sorting, and helping with the installation, unpacking, and repacking. All the while he held the work submitted and the artists who created the work in high regard. After eighty-three years of life, love, work, art, and a lot of slightly off-color, but tremendously humorous jokes, Steve passed away in early November. His passing has left a huge void in the university community. Steve entered the university after a full career as a tool and die maker, the knowledge about "making" that served him so well in his new life as an artist. Over the next twenty plus years he spent in the studios at Parkside releasing the creative genius that had been hiding in his "working" career. Each day was spent pursuing his tremendous curiosity that helped him create the most marvelous and imaginative body of sculpture and prints. Several generations of UW-Parkside art students were enriched by his energy, imagination and gentle humor. In 1997, the University made him an honorary professor of art, and Beauvais Lyons selected him for inclusion in the 13th Parkside National show after he saw a body of Steve's work. Beauvais commented that he was using his "juror's prerogative" to include him; Steve was far too humble to enter the show. From all of us who knew and loved you we say farewell old friend, and this show's for you!

Note: the twenty percent commission on all print sales will go into the Stephen J. Vasy Endowed Art Scholarship Fund.
